

Pomeranians

Trademark Traits Normal 0 false false false MicrosoftInternetExplorer4 Small and fluffy Lively and alert Clever and eager to learn Willful and headstrong Some Ideal Human Companions Singles Seniors Apartment dwellers Couch potatoes Celebrities What They Are Like to Live With Pomeranians are little dogs with "big dog" personalities. They are descended from the Nordic breeds which were once used to pull heavy sledges across ice and snow and although their size has been diminished, they do not regard their size as an issue. They are lively, friendly and fun but they can be quite territorial. They grow attached to their owners and often develop a protectiveness that makes them suspicious of strangers. This not only makes for a loyal, tried-and-true companion, it makes for a superb watchdog. Pomeranians may be small but they can really deliver on the barks when a stranger approaches their territory and have little regard for their own safety. In spite of this protectiveness, Pomeranians are not too clingy or co-dependent; they will get along with every member of the family, including other pets, providing they are introduced properly. They are intelligent, busy and curious, with a lovable independence, but they crave your attention and playtime, sometimes responding by standing on their hind legs like a mere cat making it difficult to refuse.. Things You Should Know Pomeranians can sometimes be stubborn and willful; they can easily dominate a weak-willed owner. A firm but friendly hand is needed day-to-day, especially when it comes to their yapping bark which although they can be taught to limit from an early age, must be reinforced on each and every occurrence lest the Pomeranian own the owner! Like several other proud and small breeds, they are blissfully unaware of their size. They have in the main friendly temperaments but will not think twice about "taking on" larger dogs if you or they feel threatened. Give them their little bit of freedom by all means but keep them close and protect them from conflict. Pomeranians have lots of coat so if you do not want pet hairs on absolutely every outfit you have, consider an alternative breed. They not only shed their coats quite a bit, they also require daily brushing to prevent tangling. Check their ears and ears regularly, and make sure they get scheduled visits to the dentist—Pomeranians' teeth tend to gather tartar easily. They are very happy living in apartments as long as they get regular exercise and human interaction. Toy breeds make excellent companions for the infirm and the elderly because they require less exercise, less food, give lots of affection and are loyal. It is worth bearing in mind that toy breeds, like Pomeranians, can live to 20 years, particularly if you are considering a dog for an elderly relative. The Look of the Pomeranian Overall, Pomeranians have a poised and proud carriage. Compact, sturdy and fluffy with slightly rounded, wedge-shaped heads, straight muzzles and pointy ears, they sometimes have a fox-like appearance. They have dark, deeply set eyes and an overall alert and lively expression. Their undercoats are dense and soft, their outer coats rough, profuse and puffy, while their feathered tails curl over the back. Coats can be nearly any color, but the most common are red, orange, off-white, brown or black.

About the Author

Noel Dundas is the author of several publications, including The Canine Diabetes Management Guide and the Canine First-Aid Handbook. Computing since the late 60's, he is a self professed Geek and has become someone to turn to for advice on canine diabetes. You can contact him for advice about the diabetes symptoms dogs exhibit at www.DogDiabetesSite.com/contact.html for reliable and free advice.

Source: <http://www.doginform.com>